Overview

Primary Child-Adult Relationship Enhancement (PriCARE) is a training model used to help develop positive parenting skills to assist caregivers of children with disruptive behavior or experiences of trauma in improving the adult-child relationship. These skills can be used by non-clinical adults to assist children as well as their caregivers within multiple settings. PriCARE skills are not crisis management skills but provide a foundation of skills for parent-child relationship improvement and compliance.

Core Components

PriCARE is comprised of two main parts:

- 1) Part I involves developing a series of skills which help build a strong relationship between a child and caregiver.
- 2) Part II involves learning skills which improve compliance utilizing giving good, effective instructions that increase the likelihood of child compliance.

Trainers utilize skills training, role playing, and psychoeducation to teach PriCARE skills to caregivers.

PriCARE in the DBHIDS Network

DBHIDS established the Philadelphia Alliance for Trauma Services (PACTS), to serve you with traumatic stress and behavioral disturbances. Providers participating in PACTS receive training and ongoing implementation support for delivering PriCARE by expert trainers. Performance assessment and evaluation is conducted by the University of Pennsylvania.
